

Guide for Learning Ambassador

Interface between the VET provider and the world of work

Learning Ambassadors are key persons of collaboration that act at the interface between companies and educational institutions. They are career guidance specialists, they know the needs of companies in their area and the learning opportunities in the workplaces. They train workplace instructors and new Learning Ambassadors. The role of many professional teachers or trainers is already similar to that of a learning ambassador.

We believe that with the help of this guide you will be able to develop further the skills you need in your work .

Are you already acting as a Learning Ambassador?
With this test you can determine your readiness for providing on-the-job training periods for students and workplaces .

This material has been created during the NextSteps@TechVET project (2020-1-FI01-KA202-066596).

The NextSteps@TechVET project aims to respond to changing skills needs by developing operating models based on ever closer collaboration between companies and education providers, and by increasing the career guidance skills of teachers and trainers in both educational institutions and workplaces. Collaboration includes anticipating competence needs, assessing competence, planning, and implementing competence development, and responding to the needs of continuous learning.
